REFERENCE : Memo for DCI from D/Operations, JCS,

1. CIA fully recognizes the need for informing the Department of Defense of those Agency air operations that approach or enter into areas of peripheral reconnaissance activity. To insure there is no conflict of interest, the following procedures are now in effect with the JRC and are based on the timetable used by this Agency's operations staff.

b. At the Agency's "mission plan" time [REDACTED], when the final decision on the route to be flown is made, a map depicting the mission route is provided the JRC.

c. At final Washington clearance time (Go-No-Go) [REDACTED] prior to take-off, the JRC is given the take-off, delay, abort or cancellation message whenever the fact becomes known. If a new schedule is established, this information is passed to the JRC.

2. As you are aware, security considerations for overflight operations pertaining to pre-mission track information do by necessity require the tightest control. This particular information in the Agency is restricted to only those in an absolute need-to-know category (the Director and Operations Mission Plan and Control Team). Your cooperation in continuing this policy in the Department of Defense would be appreciated.

3. If the above information does not provide the necessary information required to insure there is no conflict of interest with peripheral activities, please advise.
